TEACHING

Courses Taught

- LIT 315A: Postmodern Literature, Developed: Fall 2024. Semesters Taught: 1. Course Description: Surveys postmodern literature with attention paid to the use of formal experimentation, deconstruction, parody, and reader complicity to enact social, cultural, and political critique. Assignments include critical literary analyses that similarly enact the argument through form, structure, modality, and organization.
- ENG 322: The Art of Memoir, Developed: Fall 2023. Semesters Taught: 1. Course Description: Examines creative nonfiction, lyric memoir, and multimodal writing through literary and craft analysis, mindfulness and body mapping, and creative writing. Assignments include thematically linked short stories generated from memories stored in the body.
- LIT 275: Disability Studies in Literature and Culture, Developed: Spring 2023. Semesters Taught: 1. Course Description: Examines literature by disabled creators alongside theories in writing studies, affect studies, science and technology studies, and other diverse fields to explore the interdisciplinary field of disability studies. Assignments include creative-critical essays and access guides.
- ENG 206: Introduction to Writing Studies, Developed: Spring 2022. Semesters Taught: 3. Course Description: Surveys the Rhetoric and Composition, Creative Writing, and Professional Writing disciplines by introducing students to ongoing conversations, keywords, and instructional training in these fields. Assignments include critiquing and expanding disciplinary keywords and reflecting on their experiences as students in Writing Studies courses.
- ENG 214: Introduction to Rhetorical History and Theory, Developed: Fall 2022. Semesters Taught: 1. Course Description: Engages with foundational texts and concepts from ancient Western and non-Western rhetorical traditions, using classical Greek, Chinese, and Indian theories of rhetoric to critically illuminate contemporary assumptions about writing and the production and dissemination of mis-, dis-, and mal-information. Assignments include collaborative annotations and case study analyses.
- LIT 205: Introduction to Literature, Culture, and Media, Developed: Fall 2021. Semesters Taught: 3. Course Description: Explores the intersection of literature and media by surveying electronic literature, introducing students to interdisciplinary theories to help them critically consider the narrative uses of digital media and analyze the persuasive, immersive power of form in digital storytelling. Assignments include narrative and formal analyses of video games.
- ENG 201: Writing in the Disciplines, Developed: Fall 2021. Semesters Taught: 8. Course Description: Introduces students to writing in the disciplines by emphasizing disciplinary research writing, using principles of qualitative research: primary research using interviews and personal narrative, and secondary research using scholarly databases to help students learn to assess, summarize, synthesize, and cite peer-reviewed articles. Assignments include a semester-long qualitative research project.
- ENG 120: Critical Writing, Developed: Spring 2019. Semesters Taught: 5. Course Description: Introduces students to the principles of composition and conducting basic research, including library and Internet research, in a core composition course designed around research into discourse communities. Assignments include game sessions of Dialect with collaborative recordkeeping to demonstrate the evolution of a discourse community, ethnographic participant observation, and critical discourse analysis.
- ENG 110: Critical Writing, Developed: Fall 2018. Semesters Taught: 1. Course

Description: Introduces students to the process-oriented nature of writing in a core composition course, helping them develop strategies for effectively drafting, revising, and editing analytical essays. Assignments include literacy narratives and process reflections.

- ENG 110 CAP: Critical Writing. Developed: Fall 2018. Semesters Taught: 1. Course Description: Introduces students to the process-oriented nature of writing in a core composition course in the Challenge to Achievement at Pace (CAP) program, themed around critical university studies and designed to help them develop strategies for critical reading and drafting, revising, and editing analytical essays while learning to recognize and articulate “the hidden curriculum” of academia.

Courses Created

- WS 297V: Feminist Disability Justice. Developed: Spring 2025. Semesters Taught: 1. Course Description: Explores antiracist, feminist, queer, and trans frameworks undergirding disability justice, recuperating disability from its politicized, neoliberal, individuating contexts and re-presenting it as a complex medical, social, and cultural construct that is contingent and communal. Assignments include access guides, rhetorical analyses, and “un-essays.”
